“ To my brother Mark- Know that I think about all of you daily. I thought about you every day before Mom died...and now I think about you even more. Thursday when I went back to class - I told myself I was going to try avoiding talking about Mom...I didn't want to feel such sadness over her loss. The very first Religion class - we talked about St. Therese of Lisieux. I had forgotten about how her mother had died of breast cancer when she was very young. In spite of her loss, she was deeply influenced by a mother and father who loved their faith. St. Therese - who never did anything that ended up in Guinness book of world records - ended up being a Doctor of the Church. Her "little ways" inspired both young and old to offer up their small deeds of kindness in the name of God. I couldn't help thinking of my mother - and actually talked about her a great deal...with a heart full of joy. How could I not be joyful thinking about all the things she did for so many people! I will cry many days to come...but my mother's example lives on each day in the things she taught me- and you to do. She made a difference in so many people's lives. Most of all - she made such a difference in our life. We are blessed! Beth Ann

“ What a pleasure to listen to Arlene sing at church and she does our cub scout den mother for cookies and milk after school. My condolences, Jack, Beth, and Marc. Although my book sales are slumping like last year Cubs batting averages and a shoe salesman job like Al Bundy looks better because one Imelda Marcos would buy many, but here I am the author of Raise the Flag, a book about a journey for education, something made in USA, thanks to a WW2 vet who keeps students in school for a brighter future. And so many perish between the lines of innocents, ignorance, and education while the author lives his stories and shares his memoirs in Raise the Flag.
